The Wrong Side of Wrong

A street in the neighborhood where my friend lives.

A friend of mine, who barely makes ends meet as a single mother in a poor barrio, came to me asking for money. She felt it necessary to flee her home and neighborhood for the safety of her family.

Threats were made against her son who had told the police the truth about the criminal activity of a local gang. Now the whole family was a target..

My friend raised her children in a Christian home, where honesty was valued, and they stayed out of trouble in that neighborhood where trouble often came looking for young people. Yet, here they were now, a law-abiding Christian family on "the wrong side of wrong."

I gave her 1,000 Dominican pesos (about $23) for bus fare and supplies to get the family to another city where she had relatives. The problems eventually blew over, and the family returned to their home in San Pedro about six weeks later.

Raising children to know right from wrong does not always save them from troubles. Faith and trust in God can see us through troubles, though. Christian friends and relatives helped this family through their difficulties. No one lost their faith or compromised their moral values during this family's crisis.

Keep praying, Anita

A few of the good young men in that neighborhood.
